

Dear President Zuma,

I write this letter to you to ask you if you would please STOP the poaching of the seriously endangered rhinos in your country. You don't know me and you don't know anything about me. All you know is that I am a message in a letter, pleading for you to use the power you have to stop this deadly torture of a fellow species.

I won't pretend I understand the complexities of your situation, nor will I pretend to understand the culture and traditions of your countrymen. I can, however use whatever small voice I have to plead with you to stop this NOW. The right thing to do is to make it stop; and you are more than aware, I am sure, that the right thing to do is seldom the easiest, but it brings the most non-financial rewards.

Please Mr. President, reward the rhinos, an endangered species that coexist with humans in your country, and reward yourself with the knowledge that your decision could be the ONE that creates a new beginning in your country. Please Mr. President, do the right thing by these majestic creatures, and stop the poaching NOW.

Yours most sincerely,

via email 10/12/12
